Crankbaits: Crankbaits are designed to mimic baitfish and have a diving lip that allows them to dive to a specific depth when retrieved. They often produce a wobbling or rolling action that attracts fish. Crankbaits come in various shapes, sizes, and diving depths.

Jerkbaits: Jerkbaits are typically long, slender lures with a suspending or slow-sinking action. Anglers impart action to the lure by twitching or jerking the fishing rod, creating an erratic swimming motion that can trigger fish strikes.

Topwater Lures: Topwater lures are designed to float on the water's surface and create commotion or a popping sound when retrieved. They are often used to target fish that strike prey from below, and they can result in explosive surface strikes.

Swimbait: Swimbait is a realistic fish-shaped lure that can be used for various species. Some are hard, while others are soft plastic. They can be retrieved at a steady pace to mimic the swimming action of fish.

Spinnerbait: Spinnerbait combines a metal spinner blade with a jighead and a skirt, creating a lure with both flash and vibration. These baits are often used for bass fishing and are retrieved through the water with varying speeds.

Lipless Crankbait: Lipless crankbaits are hard lures without a diving lip. They sink quickly and are effective for fishing in deeper water or when fish are holding deeper in the water column.

Tackle Box or Storage Container: Many hard bait sets include a tackle box or storage container to keep your lures organized and protected.

Variety of Colors and Sizes: Hard bait sets often include lures in different colors and sizes to match the conditions and the preferences of the fish you're targeting.
